a dry pulp/powder, mixed with lard, sugar and berries and then formed into loaves and dried again. These loaves were used as a staple food for men on hunting trips back in the 18th and 19th centuries. She also told me about some pemmican found in Grande Prairie recently, said to be approximately 500 years old and still perfectly preserved. The entire event was sponsored and made possible by several generous companies and businesses. It was a great weekend and many went home with great prizes, including cash prizes and a few homemade prizes worth bragging about.
