STAN FRASER COMES HOME

On Sept 2, two weeks and 555 kms since his journey's start in Fort Nelson, Stan Fraser was joined at the top of Wabi Hill by Chetwynd locals and an RCMP escort to walk the last 5 kms into town. The descent down the hill took 80 minutes, in stark contrast to the estimated 130 hrs he spent walking from Fort Nelson.

The entourage was greeted by First Nations drummers and other event attendees, with performaces by Teigen Gays, Kym Gouchie and Elvis/Freddy Steen.

"I joined this because it means absolutely everything to me. I've been dealing with mental illness pretty much my whole life, from my mom, to me, to my kids, and then I lost my daughter to suicide. If we talk about it, break the silence, maybe I can stop somebody else from having to go through what I went through. I just need to do something," Marv McKinnon said, who was one of the event planners.

PROVINCE CONFIRMS TAX MEASURE IMPLEMENTATION DATES, DEFERRAL DEADLINES FOR BUSINESSES

The Province is delaying implementation dates to April 2021 for changes to provincial sales tax (PST) and B.C.'s carbon tax, to help businesses and families through the COVID-19 pandemic and recovery.

A scheduled increase in April 2020 from $40 to $45 per tonne of carbon dioxide equivalent (tCO2e) had been paused until at least October as part of the COVID-19 Action Plan. Upon review, the B.C. government has decided the carbon tax rate will remain at its current level of $40 per tCO2e until April 2021, when it will increase from $40 to $45 per tCO2e. The carbon tax will increase to $50 per tCO2e in April 2022.

This change will give businesses and families more time to recover from the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, while still meeting the required federal carbon-pricing backstop rate of $50 per tCO2e by 2022.

The implementation of two other planned tax changes is also being delayed until April 2021. This includes the elimination of the PST exemption for carbonated beverages that contain sugar, natural sweeteners or artificial sweeteners, and the addition of new PST registration and collection requirements for e-commerce businesses located outside B.C.

To further support businesses, the employer health tax (EHT) 2020 quarterly installment dates are being extended as follows:

Dec. 31, 2020 (original instalment date was June 15, 2020)
Jan. 31, 2021 (original instalment date was Sept. 15, 2020)
Feb. 28, 2021 (original instalment date was Dec. 15, 2020)
These extensions will give businesses more access to cashflow during recovery and more time to determine their annual payroll and estimate the amount of EHT they will owe. The 2020 EHT filing and balance due date will remain March 31, 2021.

As a reminder for businesses, effective March 23, 2020, as part of B.C.'s COVID-19 Action Plan, the filing and payment due dates for the following sales taxes were extended to Sept. 30, 2020, along with the 2019 EHT filing and balance due date:

hotel tax, also known as municipal and regional district tax tobacco tax
motor fuel tax
carbon tax
These administrative deferrals are not being extended further. Businesses were never able to spend taxes collected from customers such as PST, but delaying tax remittances removed an administrative burden from potentially short-staffed businesses during the beginning of the pandemic.

I'm a nurse in a hospital's children's ward. One night, I was at the nurses' station when I heard a little boy in his room talking. He kept the patter up for some time. Finally, I got on the intercom and said softly but firmly, "All right, Johnny, it's time to go to sleep now." There was quiet in the room, and then he said, "OK, God, I will." I didn't hear a peep from him until morning.

Stan had plenty of opportunities to talk to people along the way, some of whom spent time walking with him. "He's educated people along the way. He's actually making mental health more aware and acceptable to men as well," event spearheader Charla Brazeau said.

Stan says next year they may be expanding the walk to PG. "All I can say is the possibility is there. We are definitely talking about different scenarios. Next year we want to continue to bring this out to the open, to try and bring the community, the people together and hopefully we can turn this tide against the shame and the stigma against mental health. There's nothing to be ashamed of, we've just got to be more open about it," he said. "Just because this walk is done, I don't want the support, the people to stop. Continue supporting one another, continue reaching out to mental health [resources]," Stan added. Representatives from Canadian Mental Health were among those in attendance, along with a table of pamphlets people could take home with them. "Pick up some of these pamphlets, read about it, and if you don't suffer from mental health issues, you're [still] a part of the problem, because I think that's where the stigma is really coming from is from people who don't understand and who don't know anything about mental health. So pick up some pamphlets, read about it, understand it, support one another."

"If we didn't have our own mind to think about, we wouldn't be able to help other people, and one of the things we go through mentally in life is trying to help others, and one of the major things that we have to do amongst each other is be selfish and help yourself first so you can help others, and I'm glad Stan is here today to help others," Mayor Alan Courtoreille said.

Stan walked an estimated 989,900 steps, lost 12-15 lbs, and has raised $3200 so far, most of which will be donated to Canadian Mental Health (a small portion of the money raised will be used to cover the cost of gas and food).

To keep the conversation going, to learn more, or to donate to the cause, go to 'Walk and Talk the Peace - A Journey to Promote Mental Health Awareness' on Facebook.

ENHANCED MENTAL HEALTH PROGRAMS SUPPORT A SAFE RETURN TO SCHOOL

Students and staff will head back to school with more resources available to support mental wellness during the unprecedented school year ahead.

"The excitement that normally comes with back to school may feel more uncertain this year, as many families worry about COVID-19 and keeping everyone safe," said Judy Darcy, Minister of Mental Health and Addictions. "These feelings are understandable. Nobody should have to face their worries alone, which is why we are investing in more mental health supports to help students, parents and educators navigate a safe return to school."

The Province is boosting funds immediately for school-based wellness programs and supports by $2 million, topping up the $8.8-million investment over three years that was announced last September. This means that for the 2020-21 school year, school districts and independent school authorities will receive a total of $3.75 million to promote mental wellness and provide additional supports for students, families and educators as they work together to get through this challenging time.

"Now more than ever, we must actively support student mental health and wellness," said Rob Fleming, Minister of Education. "This added investment will help us deliver immediate resources to schools, students and families so that our students can get the help they need to reach their full potential, now and into their bright futures."

School districts will determine how funds are used based on their individual needs to help students adjust to this year's challenges. Funds may be used to enhance staff training, student workshops, family information nights or to develop new resource materials for educators and families. Mental health programs will also be expanded this year to include staff well-being, in addition to a focus on trauma-informed practices that build capacity for good mental health now and for years to come.

Surveys show that many people in British Columbia are experiencing an increase in mental health and substance use challenges as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, especially those with pre-existing conditions. Government reminds British Columbians that help is available for people of all ages, and there is strength in seeking support.

"It's important for people to know that it's okay to not be okay, especially during these extremely challenging times," said Katrine Conroy, Minister of Children and Family Development. "With this funding, young people of all ages and their parents can get more support from our many programs and services that help keep students on the path to success."

As families, teachers and staff prepare for a school year that looks very different, help is available if worries begin to feel unmanageable. Free and low-cost counselling services are available online, by video and phone through programs such as BounceBack, Living Life to the Full, Here2Talk, Foundry's virtual services and more, for anyone who needs someone to talk to.

Since the COVID-19 pandemic began, the Province has invested $6 million to expand existing mental health programs and launch new services in response to the extraordinary situation.

Improving mental health in schools is an integral part of government's plan to build a comprehensive system of mental health and addictions care that British Columbians deserve, as outlined in A Pathway to Hope, B.C.'s roadmap for making mental health and addictions care better for people in British Columbia.

Implementing A Pathway to Hope is a shared priority with the BC Green Party caucus and is part of the Confidence and Supply Agreement.
