Northeast B.C. First Nations receive $127,125 to tackle poverty

The Ministry of Social Development and Poverty Reduction announced the grants from the First Nations Well Being Fund on Wednesday, including:

- Doig River First Nation - $32,125 to support mental health wellness by delivering a series of trauma workshops in the community, including language revitalization;
- Prophet River First Nation - $25,000 to explore and define "community wellness and measures" by hosting a series of workshops and to deliver a draft community wellness plan;
- Saulteau First Nations - $35,000 to strengthen local food security, building a community cooler and meat-cutting shack, and instruct youth in traditional food-preparation methods;
- West Moberly First Nations - $35,000 to improve food security by delivering a series of community canning workshops over two years;

"All orders of government are finding ways of reducing poverty," said Social Development Minister Nicholas Simons in a release. "I'm excited that through this funding, First Nations communities are able to develop projects that will improve individual well-being and benefit communities."

The province says the fund was started with a $2.7-million grant, and that more than $2 million in grants have been provided to 62 First Nation communities in B.C. The government says it has legislated targets to reduce the child poverty rate by 50% and the overall poverty rate by 25% by 2024, and Cheryl Casimer, political executive for the First Nations Summit, says "a shocking 25% of Indigenous people in Canada living in poverty."

"This welcome program is a modest step toward addressing the disproportionately high rates of poverty for First Nations' citizens in B.C.," Casimer said in a release. "The program was very oversubscribed, which clearly shows there is a high demand for much-needed funding for these types of important community projects. We hope that the success of this initiative will lead to greater poverty reduction funding opportunities for our communities in the future," Casimer said.

Don't sit on cold ground: So a couple weeks ago, me and my friends were sitting on this cement kind of pedestal (as we called it) It's basically the steps up to the portable. (classroom that no one uses) and this weird supply French teacher comes up to us and says: you shouldn't be sitting on this ground, it's too cold and it's bad for your ovaries. I asked her how or why and she said that if children sit on cold ground their ovaries will freeze and that we won't be able to have kids. Now it's an inside joke between us about not sitting on cold ground

AUTUMN BABIES ARE SMARTER, AND HALF THE WORLD ENJOYS MATING SEASON IN UNEXPECTED WAYS EVERY FALL.

Monarch butterflies peace out

Monarch butterflies make autumn a migratory season, flying South from America to the relative warmth of Mexico and parts of California. Traveling at speeds of between 12 and 25 miles per hour (that's just shy of Usain Bolt's average 27.8 mph footspeed), they are the only insect that migrates up to 2,500 miles for nicer weather

More pumpkins, please! Pumpkins, perhaps the most iconic image of autumn, are grown on six of the seven continents (sorry, Antarctica). Their name comes from the Greek word pepon, roughly meaning “large melon.” The word traded hands from French (pompon) to British (pumpion) before colonial Americans dubbed it pumpkin. The colonials went one step further: the phrase “pumpkin-head,” referring to a dork with short hair cut all around, is recorded in America as early as 1781.
