RESKILLING PROGRAM HELPS BRITISH COLUMBIANS RETURN TO WORK

Government has launched a new Skills Training for Economic Recovery program in order to support people affected by COVID-19 to get access to new training opportunities for high-demand jobs.

“As the Labour Force Survey has shown us, our employment numbers continue to be affected by the pandemic. That’s why our government’s investment in enabling thousands of people to reskill or upskill through new, innovative short-term training programs in sought-after fields is so important,” said Anne Kang, Minister of Advanced Education and Skills Training. “These short-term training projects enable people to get the training they need to get back to work and take advantage of high-demand jobs.”

Government’s $20-million investment is providing short-term skills training to people most affected by COVID-19 so they can develop the knowledge, skills and competencies for good job opportunities while the economy recovers. Almost 2,500 British Columbians will be able to quickly build the skills needed to access jobs that are in demand and get back to work sooner.

“We know there are British Columbians who are really struggling through this pandemic and we want to help,” said Ravi Kahlon, Minister of Jobs, Economic Recovery and Innovation. “I’m proud we are investing in short-term skills training projects that allow people throughout the province to access training to get them back to work and help rebuild our economy.”

My husband bought an exercise machine to help him shed a few pounds. He set it up in the basement but didn't use it much, so he moved it to the bedroom. It gathered dust there, too, so he put it in the living room.

Weeks later I asked how it was going. "I was right," he said.

"I do get more exercise now. Every time I close the drapes, I have to walk around the machine."

Several months ago, my daughter and I had similar virus symptoms. She decided to consult a doctor so as not to lose any more time from her job.

"I'll see the doctor," she said, "and then tell you what's wrong with us."

The next day she called to say, "Guess what, Mom. We're pregnant!"

My two-year-old cousin scared us one summer by disappearing during our lakeside vacation. More than a dozen relatives searched the forest and shoreline, and everyone was relieved when we found Matthew playing calmly in the woods.

"Listen to me, Matthew," his mother said sharply. "From now on when you want to go someplace, you tell Mommy first, okay?"

Matthew thought about that for a moment and said, "Okay. Disney World."

Health For Your Home

by Linda Franklin

This column is designed to address economical discoveries that will affect your health in a positive way.

Let's Talk Dirt!

By February, some of us are looking forward to walking on good old earth, again, so let's talk about dirt. Knowing our dirt is prerequisite to taking full advantage of the coming gardening season. Perhaps someone thought of enriching the soil around your home before you moved there. Others, thinking to improve their soil have mixed in a bale or two of commercial potting mix, or peat moss; these will help lighten heavy clay, or acidify alkaline soil, no nutrients are added.

Taking a walk in the woods in early Spring and filling bags with dead leaves and forest soil is an inexpensive way to introduce nutrients as well as friendly bacteria and fungi. Keep a compost pile. One of the most recent developments in the cultivation of flower gardens is mixing vegetable plants among the colorful blossoms; lettuce, ornamental cabbage, peas on a trellis (or woven string) against the house. Potatoes have beautiful foliage and blossoms until late summer. Strawberries are a perennial—they come up from the root the next spring, and can blossom in white, pink or red.

This is the time of year to begin feeding your gardening dreams. Order your seeds to avoid supply concerns due to COVID concerns.

Dad is from the old school, where you keep your money under the mattress—only he kept his in the underwear drawer. One day I bought my dad an unusual personal safe—a can of spray paint with a false bottom—so he could keep his money in the workshop. Later I asked Mom if he was using it. "Oh, yes," she replied, "he put his money in it the same day."

"No burglar would think to look on the work shelf!" I gloated.

"They won't have to," my mom replied. "He keeps the paint can in his underwear drawer."

My mother was away all weekend at a business conference.

During a break, she decided to call home collect. My six-year-old brother picked up the phone and heard a stranger's voice say, "We have a Marcia on the line.

Will you accept the charges?"

Frantic, he dropped the receiver and came charging outside screaming, "Dad! They've got Mom! And they want money!"

The new Skills Training for Economic Recovery stream within the Community Workforce Response Grant program is providing funding for training providers to equip British Columbians with skills for new jobs. Programs offer a diverse range of opportunities and will prepare people for careers in areas such as technology, manufacturing, hospitality, horticulture and automotive trades.

Some programs are underway. Many projects will start in the next few weeks, such as:

The First Nations Technology Council's Focus Web Development project, which will provide Indigenous participants with digital skills training for careers in the technology sector.

Aspect Safety will provide training that prepares participants for employment on major industrial projects in northwest B.C.

College of the Rockies will deliver the Child Youth Family Studies project in Cranbrook through classroom and online delivery. This training prepares people for work as early childhood education assistants and entry-level education assistants.

The Skills Training for Economic Recovery stream is part of a suite of initiatives under B.C.'s Economic Recovery Plan that will help thousands of people upskill or reskill and find their place in the post-pandemic economy. Targeted investments will help create opportunities through short-term training for in-demand jobs, Indigenous community-based skills training and education, targeted training for health and human services jobs, as well as micro credentials.

StrongerBC: BC's Economic Recovery Plan outlines the steps government is taking to help people, businesses and communities recover and come out of COVID-19 stronger and better prepared to meet the challenges ahead. It is part of B.C.'s $10-billion COVID-19 response.

Story from news.gov.bc.ca

My mom had always wanted to learn to play the piano, so Dad bought her one for her birthday. A few weeks later, I called and asked how she was doing. "We returned the piano," said Dad. "I persuaded her to switch to a clarinet." "Why?" I asked. "Because," he explained, "with a clarinet, she can't sing along."
