SAULTEAU FIRST NATIONS SIGNS AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

The provincial government and Saulteau First Nations have entered into a new agreement that will protect areas of traditional importance and guide natural resource development in the Peace Region.

Saulteau Chief Nathan Parenteau, the rest of the Saulteau First Nation Council, as well as provincial Ministers Steve Thomson, John Rustad, and Bill Bennett were all in attendance at a signing ceremony at the Saulteau First Nation yesterday afternoon.

Under the new government-to-government agreement, the Province and Saulteau First Nations will work together to manage lands and resources, including within the Peace-Moberly Tract. The tract is a large, high-value, traditional-use area between Moberly Lake and Hudson's Hope that holds great cultural significance to the Saulteau First Nations.

The agreement also provides a plan for the expansion of Klin-se-za (Twin Sisters) protected area which is located west of Moberly Lake, in the vicinity of areas affected by 2014's Mt. McAllister wildfire. Additionally, the agreement offers the Saulteau First Nations a stronger role in the stewardship of wildlife resources, forest licence opportunities, watershed planning, and the management of other areas.

A companion 10-year Oil and Gas Consultation Agreement has also been signed by the Province and Saulteau First Nations, which sets a clearer process for the Province to engage Saulteau First Nations for natural gas tenures and permitting. It also provides funding to support Saulteau First Nations' ability to review oil and gas activity referrals within territory where they practice their treaty rights.
