CLEANING UP AFTER THE STORM

The District along with 10 separate contractors worked around the clock Wednesday and late Thursday night in several areas around town. While the storm died down around 11 am Thursday morning, peak flows made for just as much concern as the storm itself without an idea as to when it will end. Crews were vigilant in the fight against Mother Nature as they worked to rectify the situation and 50th St in front of the post office and Nicholson Rd remain closed. Although the storm has come to an end, it is far from the end for the district. Damages are expected to be in the millions and we can expect several months until roads and creeks are restored to their previous condition. It is important at this time that everyone stay clear of the Post Office and Spirit park as it is dangerous in those areas. Please obey traffic control signs and be aware and respectful of road crews, who have been more than superheroes in Chetwynd's time of need.

BC LIQUOR DISTRIBUTION BRANCH CELEBRATES ITS 95TH ANNIVERSARY

The year was 1921: B.C.'s population was a modest 525,000, prohibition against alcohol was over, and the very first nine government liquor stores opened their doors on June 15.

In the 95 years since, the BC Liquor Distribution Branch (LDB) and BC Liquor Stores – one of the province's oldest retail businesses – have evolved with the times, continually re-inventing themselves to serve the needs of modern customers through the decades.

Gone are the days of darkened store front windows and the need for a permit just to buy a bottle from a man in a suit behind the counter – today's 198 BC Liquor Stores are bright, browsable spaces that boast a 52% female workforce and offer exceptional customer service and selection.

Unlike customers of yore, modern shoppers delight in the extraordinary convenience and choice BC Liquor Stores now offer: product selection has soared from just 80 products in 1921 to more than 5,200 products from 60 countries on store shelves today. Whether a customer is searching for a locally brewed craft beer or a coveted Bordeaux wine, they can find it in their local BC Liquor Store.

To help mark this special milestone anniversary and celebrate nearly a century of providing the best in beverage alcohol to British Columbians, throughout the summer, BC Liquor Stores customers will see special 95th-anniversary promotions and events at stores throughout the province. Customers are advised to check www.bcliquorstores.com to stay abreast of the latest anniversary offers and celebrations.

Quick Facts: • In 1921, customers had to buy an "annual permit" for $5 to buy alcohol, and their purchases were recorded on the back during each visit. In its first year of operation, the sale of permits generated $331,115.50 in revenue for the LDB – a whopping $4,164,913.59 in today's dollars!

• The first liquor store windows were painted dark green so passers-by couldn't see liquor from the street.

• In the early days, B.C.'s sheer size required some unique distribution methods. At the Pouce Coupe store in northern B.C., the board's supervisor of stores would personally accompany the alcohol by train from Edmonton to Grand Prairie, Alberta. From there, shipments were hauled by horse and cart the remaining 145 kilometres to Pouce Coupe, accompanied by the Alberta Provincial Police until they reached the provincial border.

• In 1921, only 18 women worked for the 251-strong Liquor Control Board – a far cry from the 2,119 women who work for the LDB today.

Our Aboriginal roots are showing

There is a lot to celebrate this June 21, when National Aboriginal Day takes place. The First Nations, Inuit and Métis are the ancestral mothers and fathers of this land where we all live, and nowhere is that more evident than in our place names. From some of our biggest cities to our rivers, lakes and parks, Aboriginal place names mark our maps to this day.

Even if you don't live in British Columbia, you're probably familiar with the Haida-Gwaii islands or the Coquihalla Highway. In Alberta, you'll see signs for Lake Athabasca or Lake Minnewanka.

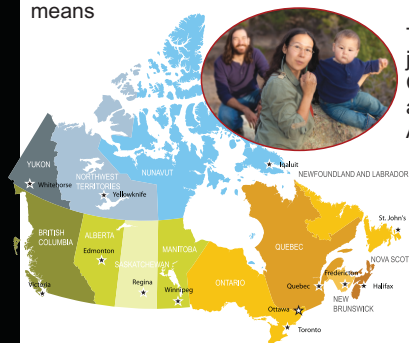

The word "Saskatchewan" means "swift-flowing river" in Cree, and "Manitoba" means "spirit strait." "Ontario" means

"great lake" in Mohawk, while "Quebec" is from the Mi'kmaq "strait."

Our newest territory, Nunavut, refers to the Inuit expression for "our land," and Nunavik — the northern region of Quebec — is the Inuktitut word for "great land." In Yukon, there's the Klondike and Kluane Lake. In the Northwest Territories, you can visit the Nahanni National Park Reserve or fish in the Slave River.

In New Brunswick, we have the Miramichi, said to be the oldest indigenous place name in the country. In Nova Scotia, we have Antigonish and Pictou; in Prince Edward Island there's no shortage of Mi'kmaq place names, and in Newfoundland and Labrador we find Nunatsiavut and Wabush, to name just a couple.

These well-known place names are just the tip of the iceberg. Visit any of Canada's provinces and territories, and you'll see the importance of our Aboriginal roots in the name of nearly every nook and cranny.

Look at a map of Canada and you'll see that most of our place names come from Aboriginal languages.

W.A.C. BENNETT DAM VISITOR'S CENTRE

The W.A.C. Bennett Dam Visitor's Centre held their grand re-opening on June 9 after completing several significant upgrades. The ceremony was hosted by Bob Gammer, Manager of Northern Community Relations for BC Hydro and Lindsay Thompson, Manager of the North Region for BC Hydro's Aboriginal Relations. They began by acknowledging their presence on Native land, followed by a prayer from a Kwadacha Nation elder who then performed a smudging ritual. After some drumming and chanting from the Blueberry River First Nations, the speeches began and outlined the history of the project, which began 4 years ago after it was determined the building was out of date and required upgrades. The ceremony marked the opening of Phase 2, and featured a mix of tones both celebratory and somber, due to the history of the dam's impact on Native lands. A documentary detailing this impact, featuring interviews with many local Natives, was one of the new features in the Centre along with several interactive exhibits demonstrating how power is generated, how it reaches our homes and what we can do to conserve energy. The dam was an engineering marvel when it was built in the 1960s and continues to be an efficient method of generating power from water, but the effect of the dam on Native communities was not properly addressed at the time, and so while BC Hydro remains proud of the dam, they are making efforts to ensure that impact is not forgotten. One effort that was taken was to feature a healing session tent, where George Jeffrey of the Tsow Tun Le Lum Healing House provided healing sessions for anyone overcome with emotion or grief brought on by the memories of the dam.

BC Hydro considers the ceremony an important part of reconciliation, and said they are committed to not repeating the mistakes of the past, as they are still learning about the dam's impact today. The speakers acknowledged that the Visitor's Centre reflects the history that we share, both good and bad, and said that "the door is forever open to have that conversation." Dan George, speaking on behalf of the Peace Aboriginal Advisory Committee, said progress came at a great price, but that this moment was a first step toward reconciliation and that "together we can accomplish so much more." The ceremony closed with another drumming session before people explored the Centre and went on bus tours into the dam itself, 500m below the ground. The dam is an impressive technological wonder, providing up to 1/4 of all the power in B.C. and pulling 1.4 million litres of water per second when all 10 turbines are operating at maximum power. The dam is capable of withstanding an earthquake measuring up to 8.6 on the Richter scale and was built to last 900 years.
