HIGH ON ICE IN FSJ

The "High on Ice Festival" took place this past weekend in Fort

St. John. Chetwynd's Councillor's Rochelle Galbraith and Alec Brownlee, along with their families, took part in the Mayor's Carving Competition.

This year's ice carving was no easy feat for the participants, as winds were clocked at 90 km/h. While they made their best efforts, many sculptures melted just as fast as they were carved.

Galbraith and Brownlee and their families had a ton of fun celebrating this year's High On Ice theme: Local Monumental Milestones, and carved the P.G.E (Pacific Great Eastern) train that gave Chetwynd its name more than 5 decades ago. Their train was a joint effort from planning to execution of the caboose, engine and middle boxcar.

Dawson Creek won this year's Mayor's Competition with their InukShuk. Taylor and Fort St. John participated in the challenge as well, with Fort St. John carving 150 and Taylor carving the Taylor bridge.

The sculptures had to be knocked down on Sunday for safety reasons, due to wind gusts. Kelsey Roberts, Reporter Coffee Talk Express

The LB Energy Predators have just returned from a 3 game weekend in Williams Lake on Feb 11th and 12th. Competing against Williams Lake T-Wolves, who are the first place team in Okanagan Hockey League, was a challenge that the team lived up to.

The girls improved every game, starting with a 4-0 loss on Saturday morning and a 2-0 loss on the same evening. The predators came out strong in the third game and ended the three game stretch with a 1-1 tie. The Predators will be facing the T-Wolves again during provincials in Parksville the week of March 18th to the 24th. Watch the BC Hockey Championship website to keep updated on their games and scores during that week.

Economic development and social license, the two concepts are not mutually exclusive. If we look at Economic Development as a process to increase quality of life, by definition, we are looking at more than can be measured in employment statistics and house sales, both of which form part of the picture. But if we let these data dominate the picture, we will be missing perhaps the most vital colors embodied in social license.

Normally we think of social license as the validation of a major industrial enterprise by proofs of environmental friendliness or safety topped off with a financial contribution to some community enhancement project such as a recreation complex or clinic.

I submit that social license is much more fundamental than the restricted limits of such an understanding. Even your local government needs social license – the approval of the citizens for the vision articulated by your elected officials.

Chetwynd Council has just authorized the development of a new Economic Development Strategy. It won't be entirely new but somewhat akin to a revisiting of the Strategy developed almost exactly 16 years ago. That's a long time in the history of this small town. Your offspring that date from that year are now demanding driving lessons and are teaching you some tricks on the computer that you had not heard of in those pristine days.

We all know that many liters of water have come down our creeks since 2001. We've had two major floods in the intervening years that taught us a lot about flood control and the relation of uncontrolled rain drops to economic development – lessons we would like to have learned without the teaching aids. So we have to move on and bring our learning with us.

I believe there is a positive relationship between a community that is pleasing to the eye, a community that turns the head of the traveller passing by such that she is impelled to stop and take a second look, and the economic prosperity of that community.

A local government that fosters the beautification of the community, that creates an environment appealing to the senses, is a local government that encourages economic development. Economic development as a process to increase quality of life earns social license. You want a healthy industrial support for your community? Indeed, we need and appreciate our healthy industrial support. Then we have to continue to build a community where families feel safe, where educational aspirations can be realized, where aging loved ones can feel secure and valued, where health services are convenient, where recreational opportunities are varied.

Economic development requires a local government with vision to recognize that opportunity takes many forms. Chetwynd was built on wheels yet we are struggling to find enough appropriate parking for the wheels that more and more carry the region's commerce. Our Administration is working on this challenging and exciting puzzle.

Social license requires, among other things, the balancing of the parking needs of industrial trucks, the planting of shrubs, trees, and flowers, and the encouragement of tourists to take that second – or third look; maybe to stay another day and check out the prices of housing. But it doesn't stop there.

For your Mayor and Council to keep its social license we must also actively encourage business to set up shop in Chetwynd. It's an exciting challenge exercise to accommodate the zoning needs of business and the need for quiet enjoyment by the residents that may be grouped across the gully.

Economic Development and Social License: the two go hand in hand.

KELSEY'S CHRONICLE

The future of space exploration is upon us. Moon Express has raised $45 million from private investors and venture funds and has received permission from the US Government as well as a pathfinder for "Private Sector Commercial Missions Beyond Earth's Orbit" to land a robotic spacecraft on the moon.

The California based company Moon Express submitted their application in April of last year and the application was approved in August. Moon Express is just one of the four international private companies working towards winning the Google Lunar Xprize of $30 million. The Xprize challenges and inspires entrepreneurs, engineers and innovators to develop low cost methods of robotic space exploration. The race is on between SpaceIL of Israel, Inus of India, an international company Synergy Moon, and US based Moon Express.

The requirements to win the Google Lunar Xprize are that the robotic spacecraft must make a soft landing on the moon's surface, travel a distance of 500 metres and transmit high definition video and images back to earth. This challenge must be completed before the end of 2017.

Until now the only space explorations have been government funded, making it only possible for Russia, China and the US to explore beyond Earth's orbit.

The hopes in this new age of space exploration is to mine for the moon's many resources as well as help researchers develop space colonies for future generations. The many resources on the moon include Helium-3 which is a clean, non-radioactive energy source that could potentially power nuclear fusion reactors. In theory a small amount of this helium isotope could produce enough energy to power an entire industry if not the world. Gold, platinum group metals, rare earth metals and water are also on the scope of mining. Water could prove to be a very important resource if found on the moon. Separating the hydrogen from oxygen could help create rocket fuel, essentially making the moon a fuelling station for space crafts in future deep space explorations.

While much of this mining is theoretical at this point, the thought of robotic spacecrafts making these treks to the moon is fascinating. The abundance of information that could be learned from these explorations is endless and will only further guide future space missions.
