CHETWYND COMMUNITY ARTS COUNCIL'S NEWEST EXHIBIT

The Chetwynd Community Arts Council opened their newest exhibit this past Friday, February 9th. This is the second year the Arts Council has held the exhibit, fittingly named "Curb Your Cabin Fever" in the midst of our everlasting winter. This year's theme for the exhibit is 'sensual', capturing the essence of the most passionate month of the year. There was wine and an array of treats. As always, an elegant affair put on by the ladies of the Chetwynd Community Arts Council.

The pieces of artwork on display this month are absolutely fabulous, from fabric art and canvas pieces to photography, and even some creative works on plywood. The Arts Council always seems to gather a great collection of pieces from local artists that mesh so well together.

KELSEY'S CHRONICLE

It's that time of year when people are feeling bummed out about the holidays being over, bummed out about summer so far in the future, and dreaming of warmer days on the beach, at the cabin and on the boat. Many people experience that same hopeless feeling every year around this time but what many don't realize is that it's actually a "disorder" called S.A.D (Seasonal Affective Disorder).

I personally have a lot of anxiety. I'm just a generally anxious person but not usually depressed. At this time of year, every year, I feel a slight wave of depression. That's when I know it's time to put down the carbs and begin making my body feel better, and in turn, making my mind feel better.

Science has proven that in winter there is minimal sunlight in northern regions, which brings about a lower serotonin level and a higher melatonin level. This can lead to the feeling of less energy, irritability, decreased concentration, less motivation, a general disinterest in things that you usually feel excited about, and of course just straight up boredom! Women are more likely to feel the affects of SAD more so than men, but that doesn't mean that men don't feel like the never ending winter isn't closing in on them too. There are many ways to overcome the feeling of seasonal affective disorder that don't require a prescription.

Sunshine- Tried and true! If you're not getting enough unfiltered sunshine in your day, then your brain is feeling it. UV light from the sun is directly linked to vitamin D which is directly linked to your serotonin levels. So give the sun a good 20 minutes of your undivided attention each day, and your mood will definitely get that boost it craves.

Eat Better- We all know that food is the determining factor of what level our bodies are running at, if we eat like crap our bodies are sluggish; but if we eat a balanced diet of grains, proteins, healthy fats, fruit and veggies and dairy, our bodies thank us in the form of energy that we so badly need to function on all cylinders.

Exercise- This is one of those things that many people say or think "how can me doing something I hate make me feel better?" But as much as you would like to tell yourself that, It can, and it will! Even as little as a 15-minute walk, each day, can increase feel-good brain chemicals like serotonin, dopamine, norepinephrine, and endorphins.

Music- This doesn't help everyone, but for the music fanatics out there, you know that a good playlist can change any mood. Get the music going and feel those feelings of winter distaste leaving your body as your favourite band or artist fills your ears.

Plan something to look forward to- This is something I struggle with, only because I never want to wish away any time in my life, while waiting for an exciting event. But if you're the type of person that needs that pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, then plan a lunch date, a weekend trip or that long awaited Mexico trip, to give yourself something to look forward to.

Get outside- Whether you're going snowboarding or sledding in the mountains, or just taking the kids to the least snowed in park, get outside and soak in the fresh mountain air we are so lucky to have in our region.

At least it's nice to know that spring is just around the corner... it may be a long corner, but never the less. We can still all dream of the sand in our toes, a cold drink in our hand and some northern pike on our lines, or maybe a less hideous and more edible fish... Either way, drown your blues with some sun, a balanced diet and try to plan something to look forward to while you wait out this snowy winter in Northern BC.

How many young Chetwynd men in grade seven aspire to a career in nursing? I mean the nursing in which, as time goes on you mature and grow confident in your profession and become skilled and knowledgeable to the extent that other health professionals actually will turn to you for advice in the Emergency Room (it does happen). Indeed, the nurse on the floor (that is, with feet on the floor and head on the shoulders) is the primary care person in the hospital, responsible for patient comfort and care – and maybe even life.

Young Chetwynd women in the seventh grade: don't you feel excluded. I mentioned men first because traditionally nursing is seen as a woman's profession. Get used to sharing the floor with more men. So, if you are in the seventh grade, you also might start thinking of nursing as a career in which you can make a notable contribution to the comfort and safety of your community while you earn equivalent-to-men wages.

You might wonder how to start seriously thinking of nursing as a career. How might you translate your fantasies into action? It's quite simple, really. You will have to take your academic career seriously. You might actually be taking your schooling seriously right now. Serious might be the way you have always approached school. Great! You'll have to keep up the serious approach to all your studies.

You also might wonder why I am stressing nursing exclusively today. Here's why: the University of Northern British Columbia (UNBC) in collaboration with Northern Lights College (NLC) and Northern Health (NH) is working to establish nursing training in our region. This is great news and good for all of us here in the fantastic North East. If our future nurses can be trained right here (primarily in Fort St. John and Dawson Creek with some clinical rotations in Chetwynd) the cost to the families will be greatly reduced.

And not only that, the students will get to stay home a little longer at mostly and dad's and mom's expense – or maybe at spouse's expense. Not a bad deal, really.

Why start planning in grade seven? Why not? What better time to start planning? By the time you graduate from high school, perhaps having taken a couple of university-level courses before graduation, you will be well equipped to begin your career studies with a solid work ethic and the nursing program will be ready to kick off with its first cohort at the table.

Here's how the program is proposed to work: your first four semesters will be undertaken at NLC. This is where you will obtain your basic academic requirements, including your sciences and humanities, for entry to the program – another good reason for honing your work ethic before you graduate from secondary school.

Following successful completion of the entry requirements for the professional component of your studies, you are eligible for admission to UNBC's Bachelor of Science in Nursing (BScN) Program to be offered here in the North East. This is good news for all of us.

The BScN Program is a five-semester program that will qualify successful candidates for the degree to be employed as nurses.

Entry into the program also is open to mature individuals with the Associate of Arts degree or other equivalent or higher education. If you have to pick up one or two or more of the prerequisites you will find that they are available at NLC or at another post-secondary institution.

Planning for the program is progressing rapidly and enthusiasm is running high. Pending Provincial Government funding for capital and operating, the search will begin for faculty, space will be created for classes and laboratories, and curriculum details will be finalized.

The Peace River Regional District and the seven municipalities in the area are solidly behind the effort and will be using all our influence to convince the Provincial Government adequately to fund the capital and operating costs.

It is now up to you. Do your own planning and follow through with your plans. Grab every opportunity to convince your MLA to lean on the Government for support. All of us elected officials will do the same. Together we will win.

Oh, by the way, "time is the only coin of your life. It is the only coin you have, and only you [should] determine how it will be spent. [Don't] let other people spend it for you" (Carl Sandburg).

At Friday's reception the Arts Council ladies also unveiled their newest "Mystery Box" with a 50 shades of Grey inspired theme. There was also a basket of great stuff up for grabs including chocolate body paint, wine, drawing charcoal and candles. This was open to anyone who sent a selfie of them and their partner to the Art Council's Facebook page.

Derek Pickford, of Surerus Murphy attended the event as a model for short "life drawing classes" that took place in the gallery all evening. Derek, who seems to get himself in awkward situations, was dressed in nothing but his undies and a sheet, and sat while several groups of amateur artists tried their hands at real life charcoal drawings. Derek had a bunch of Surerus Murphy hats, t-shirts and hoodies to hand out to the winners.

Make sure to make your way down to the Art Gallery in the old district building attached to the Fire Hall this month to see all the great pieces and help support and promote our local artists.
