OPINION-EDITORIAL ABOUT KIDS AND ENERGY DRINKS

Energy Drinks: Kids on Caffeine

The start of a new school year is a great time for Northerners to reflect on how we can support healthy eating habits and healthy food environments for kids. This would include what drinks we make available to children and teens, where they live, learn and play. On that note, let's talk about energy drinks. There are a variety of brands, flavours and sizes of energy drinks. Common brand names include Red Bull®, Amp Energy®, Rockstar Energy® and Monster Energy®. These beverages contain caffeine, which provides a stimulating or "energizing" effect, and many include large amounts of sugar, in part due to the large size of drink containers. They also contain a range of other possible ingredients, such as artificial sweeteners, herbs, amino acids and vitamins.

What do we need to know about energy drinks?

- Energy drinks are not recommended for children or teens.
- Health Canada requires manufacturers to include a number of cautionary statements on the label of energy drinks, including: "Not recommended for children, pregnant or breastfeeding women, and individuals sensitive to caffeine."

ALCOHOL-FUELLED FIGHT PROMPTS PARKS POLICY IN CHETWYND

The District of Chetwynd is considering adopting a new parks use policy in the wake of a fight that occurred at the Chetwynd ball park earlier this spring. Speaking with Alaska Highway News reporter Mike Carter, Chetwynd RCMP Cpl. Scott Clay said the incident in question involved a fight between several adults who were believed to be involved with the Archie's ball tournament, the Saturday games of which were cancelled due to being rained out. RCMP were called to the Chetwynd Ball Park some time after 9 pm on Saturday May 30th.

Two people came out of the fight with minor injuries and were treated by medics at the scene, while RCMP arrested another. The matter is currently before the courts. The brawl has caused both the District of Chetwynd and local RCMP to initiate developing a policy that will clearly state what behaviour is not acceptable on public grounds. A draft of the policy put forward at the Chetwynd council meeting on Aug. 10 sought to prevent people from engaging in actions that could result in police involvement, including excessive alcohol consumption, littering, fighting and vandalizing or damaging property belonging to the district. That draft policy was voted down by councillors who felt that the policy was made redundant by the Criminal Code of Canada.

Chetwynd Deputy Administration Officer Carol Newsom says that Council thought that the policy needed more work, so the District is going to go back over it with the RCMP to see if it can be tightened up. Newsom added that the District is involving the RCMP because they want to make sure the policy isn't redundant. Cpl. Clay said that at events like a ball tournament, where people are coming in from out of town and maybe camping or RV-ing in the area for the night, usually there are the normal things that you would do at home that go along with that, be it barbecuing or having a beer. Spelling out to the users what the expected level of conduct and behaviour is takes away any misconception should enforcement need to be taken, meaning that an outright ban on alcoholic beverages at the ball park might not be in the works. The next District of Chetwynd council meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, September 8th.
